Mexico "As Usual".

The world is slowly getting back to normal. After several years experimenting with the dull and inconclusive methods whereby foreign peoples effect a change of Government, the Mexicans are returning to their own peculiar political ways. Which is to say, there is a rebellion on the boards there, with revolutionary intent, and a fair prospect of lively times to come.

It is headed—in absence—by Huerta, with whom most newspaper readers used to be familiar, even to the point of weariness. From a safe retreat in Los Angeles the once President modestly admits that the object of the movement is to place him in political power once control of the republic is obtained. It thus appears the arrangements are that Huerta shall supply the applause and the ammunition from a general headquarters in the United States, if that country does not object, leaving it to his friends south of the Rio Grande to do the fighting.

From all of which it may be inferred that there has been a new discovery of oil, or of likely-looking oil country, somewhere in Mexico.

Two Governments.

The British Columbia Government has made a profit of a million and a half dollars during the year out of the sale of liquor and the granting of licenses. Premier Oliver points out that of that sum 500,000 is not allowed the municipalities a share of the money it collects for automobile licenses and by the taxation of amusement tickets, and might well forego the direct tax if new laws upon their property-holders.

The attitude of the two Governments toward the municipalities is strikingly different. The British Columbia Government says that the municipalities should be helped if and when that can be done. The Alberta Government takes the position that the municipalities should be left no source of revenue which it can find a colorable excuse for appropriating to itself. Congratulations in the case are plainly due to the municipal authorities and taxpayers of British Columbia, not those of Alberta.

Britain and China.

Senator Borah is assured by Downing street that Britain has no intention of applying a "policy of brutal force" to China. Not that the senator is expected to believe it, or that it much matters whether he does or not, but for the benefit of any others who may have taken view, here is another reason to reason.

To such the facts should speak for themselves. The British Empire includes quite all the territorial responsibilities its inhabitants want or can handle to advantage. That the taxpayers of Great Britain are anxious to hand themselves over with obligations, financial or otherwise, to Senator Borah, but hardly to other people who give candid thought to their unwilling protests against the burdens they are already carrying.

Britain, it may be assumed, would like nothing better than to be relieved of the necessity of protecting the lives and the rights of foreigners that sit in China. But what a load of that kind must be borne anywhere in a backward corner of the world, it is John Bull who finds himself confronting the task, with the other Powers standing back far enough to escape the bullets, but close enough to be at hand when a settlement is to be made.

If the world powers had any sense of collective responsibility for China or any working regard for the welfare of the Chinese people, they would have joined forces years ago to support the elements of stability in that country and save its inhabitants from the perpetual horrors and hardships of civil war. Rightly or wrongly the Powers took the position that the Chinese have a right to fight their thieving neighbors if they want to, without regard to consequences.

Britain never has, and is not now, departing from that principle. It is lacking no faction, seeking no territory, and taking no measures to wrest concessions of any sort from China. What it is trying to do, and all that it is trying to do, is to protect British subjects, minister and trade, and to help stabilize the situation in some other country who need protection. And not as yet with as large a measure of success as could be desired, and might have been attained by the employment of a little more "force."

In the United States, or any other country, set off also by the fact that it is being held for ransom, or otherwise outraged, that is the business of the Government directly concerned. That Britain takes a different view of its responsibilities toward Britishers who find their lives or their legitimate interests in peril, surely is not a cause for alarm. Particulars as the present thus extended to the sun also extend to the extent to which those who had fortune it to be in the area where war is being waged.

The Boy and Strangers

By EDGAR A. GUST

I'll give you chance for kindness sake.
On promises that strangers make;
Sometimes I'll cash a check, although
I don't know the name of the bank.
But there's one risk I will not run—
I'll trust no stranger with my son.

Strangers always take my gold and fees,
And only leave me a cent or two.
Lions and tigers may deceive.
And I'll never let them o'er me fall.
But I'll not risk my boy to them,
With people that I do not know.

I have a task that's wholly mine.
A care I cannot well sustain.
Others may do it, but I do it well,
But that I cannot surely tell;
And I'll not let them o'er me fall.
I'll teach my boy from day to day.

He'll be his father to the end.
He'll be his father and his friend;
What he would teach, I'll teach.
To him I'll return his teach.
I owe a duty to my son.
And I shall see that it is done.

No son—no longer shall come in
And teach my boy to change and sin.
Nor shall I send him out to play.
With others who may be bad.
With many may a risk I'll run.
But strangers cannot have my son.

Breaking It Gently

By DR. FRANK MCCOY

You have anything to tell me say it.
Don't heat around the topic and prepare me for your news, or otherwise break it gently.

He said, "I am in the other day and asked if he could have ten minutes of my time. I replied, "Yes, I have time to talk." He sat down and after the first five minutes telling me what he wanted me to do; then he could take the other five minutes and explain it to me."

I don't like to have people prepare me for things. I don't want any surprises up to.

I am very naturally astute and whatever may be your news I can soon arrange my affairs to receive it.

News of preparing people to receive news really calls for a good deal of tact.

An Irishman was killed in a mine disaster. As they were bringing him home his wife denied that she was his widow and the man to whom she was wedded went on and when he met the widow at the door he said, "Don't be afraid to tell the Widow McCormick her secret."

"No," she replied. "I am Mrs. McCormick and my husband is mine."

"Like the dickens he is?" said Mike. "Wait till you see who's there to comfort him—'Breaking it gently.'

The fact is that the experienced mind can adapt itself to any situation.

Whatever the bad news may be, we can digest it in the dark.

Do You Stop to Ask "How Much?"

When you visit a hotel and ask for the best room, and pay the highest price, you think you have made an impression on the clerk. You will get more attention and service, but you don't fool anyone, unless it be yourself.

You don't fool the man behind the counter.

He knows that the man who has succeeded in piling up dollars is not foolish in the way he spends them.

He may not care what he pays if he gets the comforts he wants, but he asks and finds out what is to be had.

And he does not pay for things that are not worth the price.

Moonlight Makes Fairy Setting for "Mac" Dance

Saturday Supper Dance Attracts Local and Out-of-Town Guests

PLAYERS of white moonlight traced gaily across the walls and windows of the Macdonald Hotel on Saturday night and the result was a most charming setting to entice the guests into the elegant supper dancing room to the other end of the building.

Inside, such elusiveness gave way to the gay atmosphere of the dancing from end to end of the blue-draped dancing room to the other end of the building.

Hot house blossoms.

Twenty-five hundred attendance on Saturday were Mr. and Mrs. G. F. Newcomer of New York city; Mr. Justice and Mrs. Frank Ford; Mr. and Mrs. Foster; Mr. and Mrs. C. H. ### He's Spoofing!

A LONELY bird fancier was in the act of releasing a caged
bird when he was suddenly hosted by a passerby.

"What do you do for pleasure?" asked the stranger as he sat down.

"I sit here all day long and watch how far do pigeons fly as I sit here."

"Oh, thousands of miles,
and don't they ever get lost?"

"Well, I used to lose one now and then, but I have learned to bring them back with parrots, and when they get lost they can ask their way home."

WHO IS A DUMKE? Looking over a pile of old letters, I found one from a man who had written to me about his son, who had been killed in a motor accident.

He had written to me about his son and asked me to let him know if I had any information concerning the death of his son.
